ASIAN SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN INNOVATIONS

Prof.Ar BR Ajit

Many of my friends have asked me as to why I started a School of Architecture so late in my life, especially at a time, when my architectural practice is doing pretty fine. Many even questioned me about the viability of starting an architectural school with such a small intake, but with so many planned facilities. Yes, I know that I have started the school late in my life and I am also aware that it may not yield financial returns that people will normally expect of such a venture. Then why should I embark on such a project? This school has been started with the sole objective of creating a new breed of young architects who are fully committed to the social needs of the day, who will fully honour the sustainability commitment and who will have the ability to change the way the world thinks and behaves, by creating a more responsible environment, especially to house the unfortunate billions, who presently only have the sky as a roof above them. How can we create this new breed of architects who will be social scientists, with deep concern for our degrading environment? Is the present educational system, especially in architectural studies in general, preparing those young boys and girls to achieve such responsible positions of the future? It is these questions that persisted in my mind right from the time I completed my architectural studies to this day, watching and experiencing the output of majority of young boys and girls coming out of most of the schools in the country.

CHAIRMAN'S MESSAGE

Are we teaching the students to enable them to earn a degree and make out a mere living or are we inculcating in them the awareness and responsibilities towards the society and the environment and how they can contribute towards its betterment, that will improve the environment and for which our future generations would be grateful? I think we will have to agree that education and learning are for life and not simply for living. ASADI proposes to provide a totally different approach to architecture education in achieving the above goal for preparing graduates in architecture who are ready and are responsible architects committed to doing good for the society. Towards this, we have incorporated very many new methodologies in architectural education like, integration of verticals and horizontals from year one, adapting to the Gurukula system of education, learning from the masters, uncovering and enhancing the inborn creativity in the students by greater freedom of thought, hands-on training and the like.
